

Beautiful Things

Sometimes, you get to keep beautiful things forever. You can tuck them away in a shoe box, and stick them in the back of closet, leaving them there so you can visit them from time to time. These beautiful things are yours to hold on to. Sometimes, beautiful things stay, but sometimes, beautiful things can not, even if you wish on every star that they could. Some beautiful things have expiration dates, and time limits. You can try your hardest to beat their clock, but it will one day stop ticking. The feeling of loss that will come with them being gone will shatter your heart, and even break your spirit, but the good news is, those things can be fixed. Yes, it will take time, and hope, and faith, but pain will not crush you and hold you down forever. Losing something beautiful will not dig your grave for you. You are still here, and you are left with your very own secrets, and memories of love to keep you warm at night when the bed is feeling too cold. You are left with the promise of tomorrow, another opportunity to create, and find, and meet, more beautiful things.